Officials Break Ground For Del. Children's Museum

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Officials are breaking ground on Delaware's Children's Museum.

Math, technology and science themes will dominate the exhibits at the state's first museum just for kids. Officials say the museum's philosophy is to help children learn through play in an informal setting.

The museum is planned inside the former Kahunaville restaurant on Wilmington's riverfront.

Sen. Tom Carper, Gov. Jack Markell and Wilmington Mayor James Baker are expected at the groundbreaking ceremony Monday morning, where they will announce the date for the museum's opening.
